

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A vehicle air conditioning apparatus has discharging openings, each of which is disposed near a corresponding one of passenger seats.

5 Accordingly, air discharged from air outlets does not flow so as to concentrate on one discharging opening and instead flows toward the respective discharging openings. Therefore, the air blown from the air outlets is prevented from being mixed, thereby being capable of separately controlling the temperatures of the compartments on 10 the respective passenger seats.